

Wednesday, January 9, 1952.

I made an address at the NATO War College this morning on the foreign policy of the United States. At its conclusion, there were a good many questions which I answered as best I could.

I talked to Jack McCloy on the telephone this morning about various matters of mutual interest.

After lunch we went down to Versailles, and I spent the afternoon and a good part of the evening reading the 150 pages of the TCC report and its annexes.

The rough draft of my remarks at the War College is as follows:
